About the artwork

Part of his Helmet series, these imitations of protective wear serve as testaments to the fragility of relics over time. Once used to shield their wearers, these glass replicas now stand as enduring symbols, quietly withstanding the passage of time. Inspired by a visit to the Altes Museum in Berlin, where Kaaf encountered ancient helmets, the artist reflects on how objects from different cultures are brought together and displayed side by side, merging histories within a single space. These protective shells stand in for their wearers without revealing any human identity, highlighting a universal truth shared across humanity: vulnerability.
